Katrina & The Antiwar Movement Lend Our Hand and Our Voice

*Excerpted from recent commentary by War
Times/Tiempo de Guerra*

The antiwar movement has an important role to play in the post-Katrina struggles that are already underway. We can reach deep into our pockets to help those directly impacted by this disaster. We can add our voice to the demand for immediate accountability from those in government - starting with the President - for their dereliction of duty. We can join other social movements in making sure that the spotlight now shining on U.S. racism and class inequality is not drowned out by the voices calling for a return to "business as usual." We can do our part to amplify the voices of those who have deep truths to tell: folks who can describe what really happened during those agonizing days and nights in the Superdome; undocumented workers still too fearful to apply for assistance (over 100,000 immigrants in the region face devastation).

Antiwar activists also have particular responsibilities in pointing out the links between Katrina's impact and the war against Iraq. Money that should have gone to disaster preparations went to the war instead. National Guard members and resources that could have made a huge difference in Katrina's aftermath were instead thousands of miles away. These are vital issues to raise as we redouble our antiwar efforts, most immediately in the urgent mobilization for the September 24-26 actions in Washington, DC to End the Occupation of Iraq and Bring Them Home Now. We Demands: Money to Fund Full Recovery of the Gulf Coast, Not War in Iraq!

Our Mission Statement

We are collective of antiwar/peace and social and economic justice activists struggle for peace and justice across the World. We believe people's movements for peace and justice is a combination of community outreach and broad global mobilizing--We agree: think globally, act locally.

Peace No War is belong to any activist communities whose their goal is to unite inner-city youth and immigrant and anti-sweatshop activists in order to offer our resources for their struggles, and to link war of Iraq to the struggles in the community.

We uses Internet, arts, and educational tools to link local and global connections to support local issues, as well as activist organizations across the world.

Understanding the connections between our individual conditions of life and the lives of people everywhere in the word allows us to come together and organize across all borders. WE NEED to link the connections between: wars in Africa, south America, Asia, Iraq, Palestine & Korea with sweatshops in Asia as well as in Los Angeles, New York; international arm sales and WTO, FTAA, NAFTA & CAFTA with AIDS, hunger, child labors and child soldier; multinational corporations and economic exploitation with racism and poverty at home--then we can win the struggle.
